

Spirit that Lives Within Us

It is not what I feel that I must know. It is what the spirit that lives within my heart hungers for, what I must learn from this journey, to understand my true self. From this day I shall follow the path into the distance, to the land of truth.

As long as your heart is full of spirit, you will understand the faith in love and you will gain wisdom through what you have from the present day. Your heart and your mind will know your true self, understanding that what we must learn will not come easy. This path will not just lead you, but give you the truth in what you can't see with your eyes.

What you see and feel through the spirit within yourself will take you to a place where eagles fly, where our fathers have been before us. How does one person stay upon this path without wandering in the clouds? As long as you believe, you will not be confused with the truth. Having faith in your true self, our fathers will not lead you astray.

*Faith may be the hardest thing to come by in our age, but faith in one's true self is perhaps the most difficult variety. How do we believe in what we can't really name, in what we stray from regardless of knowing we must not stray? The answer is in part that we can rest assured that others have come before us, have trod this trail of becoming, of achieving true identity.